Ebony, A No-Curiosity-Shop of Reverent Scholarship, April 10,1915. The author of the poem is a Miss W. A. Hoffmann of San Francisco. It contains the sublime ethical teaching of the poet; his own life symbolizes the lasting results of the moral and religious education of the youth. The truthfulness and beauty of the poem can not be questioned by any one. It shows us in a nutshell, the wonderful results of the earnest and persistent labors of the author and his much improved and growing mind. It shows us at last what we ought to do and what we ought to want in life. It is a very charming piece of poetry and a most interesting thing to read. "Have a little angelic wisdom... " 1 We too will have that refined wisdom from time to time. We too will have a consecrated soul and should get our sweetness from the "little wall of pearl" which we built, as it were, in our own divine souls. The author of the poem has reached that pinnacle of wisdom. He has come into that inner circle where "there are no sounds, only sweets." And he can say with Rousseau, "My God has infused into me the sense of beauty," though he is, it may be, a very practical man. If he is that, he is growing in knowledge as the leaves do in the Autumn, or as the flowers bloom in the Spring. For the leaves decay and the flowers fade, but the fruits of our labors and aspirations live on, and the wisdom we have gained is for others to enjoy as long as we are. It certainly appeared to the author of the poem. He has passed through the school of "darkness and silence," and learned the "most ancient wisdom of the World." He has been taught how to sing the hymn of love, and to praise the glory of God. He has been taught to know that an angel is better than a master. He has been taught to be content with his wisdom and with the nothing he had. So this wise spirit is not conscious of any success, as an ordinary mortal is, for the "fruits of the spirit of him that said" abound. There is a graciousness in the poem, and a delicacy and refinement as well as strength, which will place the author of the poem among the poets of the world. The lines which are no doubt the poet's own are: "Have a little angelic wisdom, in your pure,
