Thursday, March 31, 2012 Please note, this is the finale to this story. I had a lot of fun writing about the first part, but now things get serious. It's also kind of a scary story, so be careful before reading! The journey to get back to town started shortly after the girls left the caves. The days became warmer, and the nights grew longer. Several night fell since they had left the caves, and as the girls walked, the air grew colder. No one spoke much during the journey. It was just short enough for Merida to be very tired, but long enough to allow her to remember what happened at the caves, and in the wyvern, and in the world outside. Most times, she would only speak of how awful she felt and how terrified she was of what she might face if she stayed there longer. And then came the moment that she had been dreading. Web site search where no keyword is typed and results are selected based on their relation to an attribute of the user. For example, imagine a search for teachers in Brooklyn. While they're obviously interested in the location of the search, the more important attribute is the type of people they teach. Searching teachers in Brooklyn will find them even if they teach math, but the chances of finding a math teacher in Brooklyn are slim. Thus, finding the best teachers is most likely to come from searches for teachers who teach mathematics in Brooklyn. Interface: Using links on each search page, the user is presented with four sets of results: 1. Web pages that match the user's interest in a similar way to other search results. These are considered "Google-like results." 2. Web pages that match the user's interest in a completely different way than other search results. 3. Web pages that are relevant to the user's interest but don't match in any way. These are considered "non-Google results." 4. Web pages that are completely irrelevant to the user's interest. iMetaSearch indexes the top search results from around the web. The user can also specify which search engines to index, along with specific fields, and download the results. Benefits: The best of the best search results. All search results are ranked by relevance. If iMetaSearch finds results that are not relevant to the search and not available on the search engine, it will use other search engines to find the most relevant results. High-quality results: iMetaSearch indexes results from all the major search engines. Because it works directly with the sites, you're not dependent on iMetaSearch to have any particular data.
